ANSWERS : STIMULUS BASED MULTIPLE CHOICE QUESTIONS

(C) Conflict with Native Americans in North America	Incorrect: Both Hakluyt's and Winthrop's goals impacted Native American in a severe and negative way. Economic motives caused conflicts over land and religious motives often saw missionary work prompt conflict.
(D) English involvement in the Transatlantic slave trade	Incorrect: African slaves were brought to all of the 13 original colonies, though in varying degrees, as slave labor was employed in agriculture, shipbuilding, manufacturing, etc.

3. In the 17th and 18th Century, the views expressed by Winthrop most directly contributed to

(A) Bacon's Rebellion.	Incorrect: Bacon's Rebellion occurred in Virginia in 1676 as a result of unfair treatment socioeconomic inequalities among white colonists.
(B) Metacom's (King Philip's) War.	Incorrect: Like most conflicts between English colonists and Native Americans, land, not religion, was at the center of Metacom's War in the late 17th Century.
(C) The Great Awakening.	Correct: The Great Awakening of the 1730s and 1740s was a revival of religious enthusiasm in response to the idea of rational secularism and the intellectual impact of the Enlightenment on religious thought.
(D) The American Enlightenment.	Incorrect: The Enlightenment in Europe made its way across the Atlantic rather quickly and while it did have significant effects on religious thought in the colonies, it was not itself affected by these founding religious motives.

ANSWERS : STIMULUS BASED MULTIPLE CHOICE QUESTIONS

4. Which of the following was a major contrast between the English North American colonies described in the excerpts and those of the French?

(A)	The English colonies had more diverse economic interests than the French.	Correct: While the different regions of the English colonies lent themselves to a variety of economic ventures, including agriculture, shipbuilding, distilling, logging, etc., New France was less diverse economically, with a primary focus on fur trading.
(B)	The English promoted Christian missionary activity while the French did not.	Incorrect: French missionaries, predominantly Catholic Jesuits, were significantly involved in efforts to convert Native Americans in present-day Canada.
(C)	The French colonies were more densely populated than the English colonies.	Incorrect: The English colonies experienced far more immigration from Europe than New France, where unsustainable food production and harsh winters limited the appeal.
(D)	The French had more conflicts with American Indians than the English.	Incorrect: While also experiencing violent conflict, the French had generally better relations with Native Americans than the English did. There was a degree of reliance on Native Americans by the French in order to survive Canada's harsh winters, as well as the flourishing trade of furs and firearms.

5. Which of the following best describes the impact of Parliamentary legislation on colonial economies during the 17th and early 18th Centuries?

(A)	Colonial charters mandated which goods and crops were to be produced	Incorrect: Colonial charters focused on governance and land claims.
(B)	Colonial economies developed relatively unrestrained as laws were often unenforced	Correct: The unofficial policy of salutary neglect during the first half of the 18th Century allowed the colonial economies to flourish.

ANSWERS : STIMULUS BASED MULTIPLE CHOICE QUESTIONS

(C)	Colonial manufacturing surpassed that of England	Incorrect: The mercantilist economy that drove colonialism during this time maintained manufacturing as a predominantly European venture, while the colonies provided raw materials, unrefined goods and food stuffs to the mother country.
(D)	Colonial governments turned primarily to France and Spain for trade	Incorrect: While smugglers did engage in trade with England's rivals in order to fetch better prices, circumventing English regulations was not an official policy in the colonies until boycotting occurred after the French & Indian War.

6. Prior to 1754, laws like the Molasses Act were primarily intended to

(A)	Punish colonists for disobeying Parliament and the king	Incorrect: Between the establishment of the Dominion of New England and the increased control that followed the Seven Years' War, the colonies faced little enforcement of laws, as punishment or otherwise.
(B)	Raise taxes to enrich corrupt politicians in England	Incorrect: Taxes were intended to cover administrative costs, which were high in the colonies considering the distance of travel back and forth for governing officials. While corruption did take place, it was not a primary goal of regulatory laws and taxes.
(C)	Ensure that European markets always had access to luxury goods	Incorrect: Sugar, tobacco, alcohol, and other commodities originating in the colonies were considered luxury goods but a decline in their availability was not a significant concern.
(D)	Regulate maritime trade to protect goods and revenue from foreign influence	Correct: The Navigation Acts of the late 17th and early 18th Centuries were a series of mercantilist economic regulations intended to maintain all trade and revenue within the British Empire.

ANSWERS : STIMULUS BASED MULTIPLE CHOICE QUESTIONS

7. Which of the following developments occurred during the early to mid-18th Century in response to increased political and economic influence from Parliament?

(A)	Emerging sense of an independent, national identity	Correct: American colonists still considered themselves English, even through the early days of the revolution. However, due to the policy of salutary neglect and even the Great Awakening, colonists began to see themselves as self-sufficient and different from their fellow Englishmen. This would be exacerbated by increased Parliamentary and military control following the French & Indian War.
(B)	Decline in smuggling and other efforts to undermine British rule	Incorrect: Smuggling activity saw an increase throughout the 18th Century as regulatory laws were enacted but relatively unenforced.
(C)	Complete self-reliance on colonial manufactures	Incorrect: Efforts to stem the need for British manufactures did occur later in the 18th Century but the mercantilist relationship between European states and their colonies maintained a degree of mutual reliance between the two.
(D)	A break in the colonies from English religious tradition	Incorrect: Protestant Christian tradition did not wane in the colonies. While Anglicanism did see a decline during and after the Great Awakening, it was not attributable to increased political and economic influence from Parliament.

8. Which of the following was the most significant cause for the trend shown in the graph?

(A)	Economic and political difficulties in West African states	Incorrect: While the Transatlantic slave trade did damage the economic and political stability of West African states, these changes did not directly or significantly contribute to an increase in the African American population in the British colonies.

ANSWERS : STIMULUS BASED MULTIPLE CHOICE QUESTIONS

(B) Land and economic assistance provided by Parliament	Incorrect: Land and new economic opportunities were plentiful in the British colonies during the 17th and 18th centuries. However, most of the opportunities were not directly provided by Parliament.
(C) An increase in indentured servitude in the early 18th Century	Incorrect: By the mid-17th Century, indentured servitude as a means for gaining passage to the colonies was on the decline while the importation of slaves, as well as the natural population of African Americans, was on the rise.
(D) Economic reliance by many English colonies on cash crops	Correct: Cash crops, such as tobacco and sugar cane, relied on slave labor during the 17th and 18th Centuries. Continued importation of slaves from Africa, via the Transatlantic trade system, caused a significant increase in the economic production of the colonies and, thus, stimulated general population growth.

9. Which of the following was a direct effect of the trend in immigration in the early 19th century?

(A) Increased importation of African slaves	Incorrect: Due to the natural growth of the African American population in the colonies and early United States by the 18th Century, slave importation was on the decline and eventually abolished in 1808.
(B) A successful movement to provide racial equality	Incorrect: Racial equality would be a significant issue, from the days of the abolitionist movement prior to the Civil War all the way up to today, with the Civil Rights Movement of the 1950s and 60s. However, success is difficult to gauge and equality was certainly not achieved in the early 1800s as slavery was flourishing throughout much of the US.
(C) An increase in sectional tensions	Correct: Disputes between slave states and free states, generally the North and South, saw an increase as new territories were added to the country and debates raged over whether to slavery should expand westward.

ANSWERS : STIMULUS BASED MULTIPLE CHOICE QUESTIONS

(D)	A decline in tobacco and cotton production	Incorrect: Tobacco production was surpassed by that of cotton in the late 18th Century. Cotton would continue to drive the American economy throughout the early to mid-19th Century.

10. The trend shown in the graph significantly contributed to all of the following except

(A)	Colonial expansion westward to the Appalachian Mountains and beyond	Incorrect: England doubled its territorial claim in North America as a result of its victory in the French and Indian War, justifying continued westward expansion for many colonists.
(B)	An eventual decline in immigration to the colonies due to lack of available land	Correct: Even up until the day the 13 original colonies declared their independence and eventually defeated the British in the Revolutionary War, migration to most of the colonies was ever-growing, as was the availability of land as movement westward increased.
(C)	Encroachment on Native American land and increased conflict	Incorrect: Growing colonial populations and their claiming of Native American land prompted outbreaks of conflict, including Metacom's War, Pontiac's Rebellion, and many more.
(D)	Increased economic output of the colonies, especially of cash crops	Incorrect: Population growth and economic output were significantly correlated as an increase in the labor force, free and coerced, prompted greater production and a growing economy was a significant pull factor for European migrants.
