ANSWERS : STIMULUS BASED MULTIPLE CHOICE QUESTIONS

1. Which of the following people would most agree with the view expressed in the excerpt?

(A) Alexander Hamilton	Incorrect: Hamilton was a proponent of a strong central government with expanded economic powers. He envisioned a national economy built on trade and industry.
(B) Henry Clay	Incorrect: Clay supported the use of protective tariffs to promote domestic production of manufactured goods.
(C) Andrew Jackson	Correct: A fellow slave-holder, Jackson supported westward expansion for the purposes of agricultural production.
(D) John Quincy Adams	Incorrect: John Quincy Adams was a National Republican who, following the Era of Good Feelings, supported economic growth through funding transportation projects.

2. Which of the following did not result from the debate over America's economic future in the excerpt?

(A) American System	Incorrect: The American System prescribed protective tariffs, renewing the national bank, and federal funding for internal improvements and saw pushback from generally agrarian Jacksonian Democrats.
(B) Missouri Compromise	Incorrect: The Missouri Compromise attempted to settle the debate over the expansion of slavery in 1820. Slavery was the driving force behind American agricultural production.

ANSWERS : STIMULUS BASED MULTIPLE CHOICE QUESTIONS

(C) Louisiana Purchase	Incorrect: The Jefferson administration's decision to purchase the Louisiana Territory from France in 1803 aligned with the president's agrarian vision for the country as it would provide seemingly endless land for self-sufficient yeoman farmers to settle.
(D) Second Great Awakening	Correct: The Second Great Awakening was a Protestant religious movement that saw parallels with contemporary political developments, such as Jacksonian democracy, but was largely void of economic factors.

3. All of the following actions taken by the Jefferson administration directly contradicted his desire for an agrarian nation with a limited government except

(A) Declaring war on the Barbary pirates	Incorrect: The Barbary Wars saw the first official declaration of war by the new constitutional government. It was also one of the first attempts by the United States to exert military force and political influence abroad, somewhat contradicting Jefferson's notions of a small, limited government.
(B) Purchasing the Louisiana Territory from France	Correct: While the Constitution did not explicitly award the power to purchase foreign land to the federal government, the addition of the Louisiana Territory did align with Jefferson's agrarian view as this acquisition provided millions of acres of fertile, resource-rich land to be settled by Americans.
(C) Refusal to allow Federalist-appointed judges to take office	Incorrect: Jefferson's role in the Marbury v. Madison case allowed for the expansion of federal power, namely through the Supreme Court's precedential power of judicial review.

ANSWERS : STIMULUS BASED MULTIPLE CHOICE QUESTIONS

(D) Cutting off all trade with Europe	Incorrect: Not only was it considered unconstitutional by opponents, the Embargo Act of 1807 also indirectly promoted American industry and manufacturing, thus contradicting Jefferson's vision for an agriculturally-based economy.

4. The ideas expressed in the excerpt most directly challenged the prevailing ideal in the early nineteenth century that

(A) women should pride themselves solely on their work in the home	Correct: The cult of domesticity maintained that women's role in the home should be revered and idealized. Public life, marriage and property rights, and economic opportunity were considered unnecessary or corrupting for women.
(B) women should be considered equal to men in every way	Incorrect: While Grimké advocated for complete equality, this sentiment was not a prevailing ideal at the time.
(C) women's role in society was to educate their children on their civic duty	Incorrect: Republican motherhood was a prevailing ideal but was not entirely discounted by Grimké.
(D) women were making a newfound positive impact on the national economy	Incorrect: Women's contribution to the factory system workforce was welcomed, though it was still on an unequal basis.

5. Which of the following would the author most strongly support?

(A) cult of domesticity	Incorrect: The cult of domesticity refers to the separate spheres of life that men and women operated in: men in the public sphere (business, politics, etc.) and women in the private sphere (wives, mothers, and homemakers).
(B) republican motherhood	Incorrect: Women's idealized role as mothers was still a form of oppression.

ANSWERS : STIMULUS BASED MULTIPLE CHOICE QUESTIONS

(C) women's suffrage	Correct: Stating that women "had no voice in establishing" laws concerning their lives, Grimké definitely supported granting women the right to vote.
(D) utopian societies	Incorrect: Many utopian societies, whether religiously or politically motivated, supported equality on the basis of sex. The right to vote, however, was a more practical goal in order to improve the lives of women in America.

6. Which of the following developments in the early and mid-19th Century best reflects the concerns expressed in the excerpt?

(A) The abolitionist movement's calls for ending slavery	Correct: Women's rights and abolitionism were two movements that overlapped significantly until the Civil War as they were both striving for equality for different groups.
(B) Jacksonian Democrats' appeal to the "common man"	Incorrect: Democratization during the "Age of Jackson" largely focused on the promotion of political equality for all white men, irrespective of economic status.
(C) Nativist resentment towards European immigrants	Incorrect: Nativists were not proponents of equality. They attempted to curtail immigration and imposed laws that restricted the political and economic rights of certain groups, including Irish-Americans.
(D) The expulsion of Native Americans to beyond the Mississippi River	Incorrect: The Jackson administration enacted the Indian Removal Act in order to open land up to white Americans for the sake of agriculture and mining.
